It almost didn't seem right, having to quit work, quit the summer fun, and quit sleeping late, just to go back to school. After all, just three short months ago I had graduated from high school and now the grim prospect of three more drudgerous years, a slave to the book, captive of the pen, and servant to the professor loomed ahead. And above all, to be treated like a green freshman by the upperclassmen was indeed a bitter pill to swallow. But there I was, standing out on Hoskins Avenue wondering if the institution before me was indeed Campbellsville College better known as Russell Creek Academy. A lengthy verbal proclamation by a gentleman calling himself "Henry" erased all doubts and I proceeded on my journey. A breeze swept over the campus causing the trees to sway and a little whirlwind raced between old Stapp Hall and the Administration Building. Ah, yes, the trees. The gnarled Dogwood to the majestic Oak and a row of sapling Maples that seemed to form a trail, all spread a shady blanket over the campus.

It was a beautiful day and the morning sun reflected off of the windows in the ivy faced gymnasium. I walked past that venerable of building, running my fingers through the cool ivy leaves that were still wet with dew. New red brick and sparkling grass caught my eye and I naturally supposed the two buildings before me were new and the fact that no signs had yet been placed on them further supported my theory (later I found out that I was correct and that the additions were the SUB and the Science Building). I kicked at a fly that buzzed off toward the sun and I headed in the direction of the SUB. Suppressing the desire to explore its inner spaces, I instead turned right to investigate the hill between the two new buildings. There before me was a crescent ampitheater of concrete and grass with a blacktop stage. Slowly I descended the rows and upon reaching the bottom I took a bow as if I were a great Greek actor and thousands of eyes were upon me.

That day passed and so did the weeks. My first date was spent sitting in the arbored bench next to that stately old mansion, Stapp Hall. The stars were all out and I could almost see the spire of the "Big B". At night it was lit up like a giant white cone and I often had mixed emotions about it. Indeed it was beautiful, but twice a week at nine in the morning I had to be in one of its pews for the chapel program. Besides chapel I had Freshman convocation on Fridays which was intended to teach me in a semester what I should have learned in a week. But I was in college now and its own special maturing process was teaching me to accept responsibility.

Often I would sit in my room watching the rain as it formed small puddles on the pavement and turned the grass a deeper shade of green. It was then that I realized what college was all about. The books, the teachers, the friends, many of which would only become shadowed memories and nameless faces someday in the cloudy, distant future. A raindrop fell through the barely opened window and landed on my cheek. It slid down and left a track just like a tear and I remembered a friend on the faculty that had already left us for a better world. It was quiet and I lay back on my bed and went to sleep listening to the farm report on the radio.

When I awoke the leaves were dancing before mother nature's brush and a vast monthly display of color shrouded the campus. The Dogwood, the Oak, and the Maple had donned their vesture of autumnal colors and I was a Sophomore. The building of floats for homecoming was a busy and arduous time. Chicken wire, napkins, wagons, and tractors were combined to support the theme, "Tiger Spirit". As a rule the nights were cold--very cold. Our fingers seemed to stay with the spirit of the season for they too turned--a light shade of blue. And then the weeks labor was displayed for about an hour only to be torn asunder by a multitude of greedy fingers. The napkins seemed to form a blanket behind the gym and I thought back a few weeks to that premature snow that had fallen over the earth. Drive-in students heralded it as a good omen from above; on campus students considered it the biggest social event of the year.

Mid-term gave the students an academic rating as to progress made or in most cases, regress noticed. With the brain strain came many different responses from students and faculty alike. Some teachers lost their heads and some lost other things . . . and one continuously threatened to flush students to greener places. But what was college for anyway? Sure more students started wearing glasses and walking a little slower. Bleary-eyed collegers would stumble into class with red creases on their foreheads and cheeks where they had fallen asleep on their bedspreads or toppled over their books. Eight o'clock came earlier every day and the weekends flew.

Future became present and all too soon past.

Beside from a little snow and sunshine, the monsoon season proved to be true. Kicking across campus I roused a Starling and it caught the wind and flew off toward the autumn moon. I was then alone for awhile and retreated to the Alumni Chapel. It was a time to be alone and I wondered how many other students felt as I did. I was engulfed in a hazy mist of memory like I sometimes want to do. South Hall was completed and occupied by now and there had been a series of Exodus' taking place on campus. The men in Carter moved to South to make room for the women of Stapp. And good ole Stapp met its maker that Fall. If one shed a tear a hundred did as the porch where I and many others had sat and talked, or sometimes just listened; where boy first met girl and stole his first kiss. With it went tradition but the old Victorian code still remained. The concrete world crumbles with age and the rubble is cleared away, but the abstract remains, for only the concrete and an idea are potential while a memory is kenetic.

The mist dissipated as a door was opened behind me and my reverie caught the four winds. I was no longer along and was glad for one can become a slave to solitude. Through the open door came a blast of artic-like wind that sent chills throughout my body and I realized that it was winter--and I was a Junior. Yes, cold winter with its short days and long nights--Christmas time and the new year. Basketball season was placed on a pedestal as students witnessed a winning season for the very first time. I can still see myself sitting in the high school gymnasium between the eagles, trying to transmit to the team the electrifying sense of excitement raging through my ramparts.

The trees were all bare and the skinny fingers of the Dogwood seemed to reach for the sky as I left the chapel and wandered aimlessly across campus. I stood for a moment in front of the library looking at the new Stapp Hall. Just then two snowflakes drifted down out of the grey sky and lit upon the sleeve of my coat. There they lingered for a long time and then they melted and were gone. Somehow I felt remorseful a thought about those that were gone from these now dear but trying portals.

The snow started coming down harder, so I headed for my dorm stopping momentarily to chase a squirrel that went scurring up a nearby tree.

I had to hurry now for tonight the play "The Diary of Anne Frank" was to be presented. Something had happened on campus lately that seemed to unite everyone loving drama. Darrell and Larry Gay had come and planted a new and different spark that gave we, the students, something to unite and work for and more than ever gave us something to be proud of. Everyone was raving about it and it sounded as though it could be the start of something new and big.

I decided I'd better eat first so I headed for the the "gourmet kitchens". One advantage of going to supper in the winter was the fact that you wouldn't be attacked by flies or get fly spray in your ears. I got my meal, sat down, and for some reason I wondered if I could make it as a barber. I dwelt not long on that train of thought but directed my attention to the radio which was telling me who was in the hospital from Podunk to Hog Hollow. There was a record player attached to the PA system but it was rarely used. Supper over I readied for the play, went to it, and retired . . .

I woke up and looked around me. I was drenched in sunshine and a robin was singing to me from a blossoming tree outside my window. I lept from bed and threw open a window and was embraced by a warm spring breeze. I hurridly dressed and started for the high school where I was doing my student-teaching. After all, I was a Senior and on my way to meet the world. My Senior year had been probably my best. So much had happened, although there was a lot being left for others to make happen.

Bob and the S.G.A. were making new inroads in student-faculty relations while giving the students a bigger voice in policy making. Even though the organization was but an infant, the students were going to have two classmates sitting with the Board of Trustees the next year. Many no-no's still prevailed and with every horizon captured, a new one would appear. But progress is never instantaneous but rather an evolutionary process.

While my mind was on progress, I decided to stop by the new gym on my way back to campus and perhaps take a swim. Never before had Campbellsville College witnessed such a surge of progress as the new J. K. Powell Gymnasium. A new home for the Tigers, a junior-size Olympic pool, a weight-lifting room, the works!

The final bell rang and I think I beat half of my students out of the room. Running across the yard I saw a butterfly sunning itself on a morning glory. I winked at it and it just sat there, slowly moving it's wings back and forth. Then I saw it; I saw my four years before me in a flash. When I was a Freshman, graduation seemed as far away as the sun. When I was a Sophomore it waited upon the moon. When I was a Junior it dwelt among the trees. And now, the dawn--like the morning glory, it was here and opening up a whole new world for me. Soon the lamb-skin would be mine but I wouldn't forget my Alma Mater. Always it would hold a memory-filled corner of my heart.

coach MISS HELEN OSBORNE

KEN DeHART

A junior from Columbus, Indiana, in his third year on the team has good strokes but needs experience and should be able to help the team this year.

MIKE McGINLY

A sophomore from Bowling Green, Kentucky, he was the number 2 player for Campbellsville last year. He is a steady player with great potential who first used a metal racket on our team.

manager DWAYNE HAZZARD

LARRY BATES

This year's tennis team should prove to be the best balanced team yet and will be out to prove that they are tired of being the second best team in the conference. The college has recognized the potential of tennis as a winning sport and has re-surfaced the tennis courts, furnished uniforms, shoes, and purchased a restringing machine for all those busted rackets. OUR THANKS TO COACH DON BISHOP AND COACH HELEN OSBORNE!

The three returning lettermen will be fighting for positions against Larry Bates, Mike Phones, Ken Hurt, John Kanis, Gov Combs, Phil Thompson, and David Hayes.

We feel that the team has risen in recognition and acceptance by posting a record of being the winningest team at Campbellsville College. We ask the students continued support as we seek first place in the K.I.A.C.

MISS MAPLE TRAIL

Jill Minor

Miss Maple Trail is elected each year by the MAPLE TRAIL staff. The honor is based on leadership, scholarship, and a genuine interest in the college. This year the staff has chosen its editor, Jill Minor, to hold this position. With the late beginning date and the many problems that the staff has encountered, they feel that her effort has been a great asset to the college.

Jill is the daughter of Mr. & Mrs. Clay Marcum of Campbellsville, Kentucky, and is majoring in English with a minor in history. After graduation she plans to teach and do graduate work in speech and drama.

Jill has been active in the Social Science Club, Sigma Tau Delta, Delta Psi Omega, Harlequins, College Bowl Team, and has served as Head Delegate to the M.M.U.N. for two years.

MOST POPULAR PROFESSOR

M. Darrell Reagan, director of speech and dramatics, was elected "Most Popular Professor of 1968-69" by the student body of Campbellsville College. Since coming to Campbellsville in the summer of '67, Mr. Reagan has directed the Harlequins in six outstanding productions with an overwhelming response from the college and the Campbellsville community as well. He has sponsored the Student Council, Harlequins, and Delta Psi Omega. Under his guidance the Harlequins won first place in the 1968 Homecoming Float Contest. He has also established an annual Harlequins Awards Night to recognize exceptional talent on campus. These are only a few of the contributions he has made to campus activity.

Mr. Reagan's hobbies are designing jewelry for his wife, Larry Gay, and playing with their three Siamese cats, Toro, Diablo, and Sombre. The Reagan home is always filled with cats, "Variety", and even more important, students. His sincere interest in us is why we elected him as our favorite prof.

Battle!

They roared at each other like lions, America's two most famous orators. Day after day, the torrid heat of a packed courtroom they battled with weighty arguments, tremendous speeches. Such a drama America had not seen before. Spectators fainted, the judge, jury, and defendant were forgotten as two of the greatest orators the world has ever seen raged, thundered, and strove to literally destroy each other. The audience stood aghast as one was mortally stricken in the moment of his defeat.

Clarence Darrow and William Jennings Bryan were the leading antagonists of this trial and their names were changed in the play to Henry Drummond and Matthew Harrison Brady.

John Dorough--Henry Drummond
John Wall--Matthew Harrison Brady
